

Mucus in Stool During Pregnancy

Mucus is nothing but a white or yellow fluid which helps in lubricating the airway and gastrointestinal tract. Besides lubrication, this fluid safeguards the surface area of the digestive, respiratory, and excretory system versus destructive agents like stomach acids. During pregnancy, a woman's body goes through various changes; out of which mucous in her stool is common. It is not an unusual occurrence, and usually disappears within a few days.

Infection

Urinary tract infection is one of the main mucous in urine causes. The mucus mainly comes from the WBC (White Blood Cells) which enter the urine to prevent the infection from spreading. If you are experiencing cloudy urine due to an infection, then you will also experience other signs like abdominal pain, painful sensation while urination, fever, nausea, and flank discomfort. If you experience mucous in urine on a regular basis, it's better to get yourself looked for an infection.
